The Vichy régime had legal authority in both the north of France, which was occupied by the German Wehrmacht, and the southern “free zone”, where the régime’s administrative centre, Vichy, was located. Vichy voluntarily and willfully collaborated with Nazi Germany and adopted a policy of persecution towards the Jews, demonstrated by the passage of anti-semitic legislation as early as October 1940. The Statute on Jews, which legally redefined French Jews as a non-French lower class, deprived them of citizenship. According to Philippe Pétain’s chief of staff, Germany was not at the origin of the anti-Jewish legislation of Vichy – that legislation was spontaneous and autonomous. The laws led to confiscations of property, arrests, and deportations to the concentration camps. As a result of their persecution by Vichy and the Germans, Jews populated all levels of the French Résistance. Studies show that although Jews in France only amounted to one percent of the French population, they comprised about fifteen to twenty percent of the Résistance. Among these were many Jewish émigrés, such as Hungarian artists and writers.

David Diamant is the pseudonym of David Erlich. He was born 18 March 1903 in Hrubieszow, Poland. He emigrated to France in the 1920s where he remained for the rest of his life. A Jewish communist, Diamant was a committed member of the underground resistance during World War II; on more than one occasion he was offered safe passage to England but chose instead to remain in France. After the war he worked initially with the UJRE (l’Union des Juifs pour la Résistance et l’Entraide) and devoted himself to documenting the Jewish resistance by collecting original documents and writing and publishing extensively on the subject. Diamant died in Paris on 24 August 1994.

This unique online archive consists of original documents collected by David Diamant over a period of approx. 30 years dealing primarily with the Jewish segment of the French underground resistance; many of the documents originate with communist groups, and some deal with Polish groups. Most of the documents are in French, while some are in Yiddish and comprise leaflets and handbills, printed proclamations and resolutions, information bulletins, directives, circular letters, reports, pamphlets, and organisational documents.
