DECLARATION.

The Powers who have signed the treaty of Paris, assembled in Congress at Vienna, being informed of the escape of Napoleon Buonaparte, and of his entrance into France with an armed force; owe it to their own dignity and the interest of social order, to make a solemn declaration of the sentiments which this event has excited in them.

By thus breaking the convention which established him in the Island of Elba, Buonaparte destroys the only legal title on which his existence depended; by appearing again in France with projects of confusion and disorder, he has deprived himself of the protection of the law, and has manifested to the universe, that there can be neither peace nor truce with him. The Powers consequently declare, that Napoleon Buonaparte has placed himself without the pale of civil and social relations, and that as a enemy and disturber of the tranquillity of the world, he has rendered himself liable to public vengeance.

Battlefield of Waterloo monument to get long-overdue facelift

HEMMED IN by souvenir shops and a go-karting track, the monument to the battle of Waterloo has long left something to be desired. Now, nearly two centuries after 74,000 of Napoleon's soldiers clashed with 77,000 men led by the Duke of Wellington, the British and French have agreed on one thing: that the site needs a clean up. Yesterday plans were announced for a €30m (£20m) revamp of the area around the Lion mound monument that forms the focal point of the Waterloo memorial. And, in an illustration of an entente cordiale, the contract has gone to a French company, Culture Espaces.

Yesterday's initiative is the fruit of years of discussion and a consensus that the battle of 1815 should be better commemorated. As a cultural site it compares poorly with Belgium's highly-rated First World War memorial in Ypres, and as a tourist attraction it fails to keep visitors at the site for long, losing businesses the opportunity to cash in on one of the best-known names in Belgium. The battlefield is difficult to spread out and has no easy route for visitors to follow. The Wellington museum lies in the centre of Waterloo, some distance from the Lion mound. And La Belle Alliance inn, the meeting place of the victors, Blücher and Wellington, is a disco.

Some campaigners are disappointed that the development has fallen into private hands, rather than to a charitable organisation. In all, €30m of public and private cash is being spent up in 2006 to make the site "accessible to all nationalities and ages", with an ambition to recreate what it was like to fight in the battle. There will also be audio guides and a presentation of the historical background. Culture Espaces will develop the area around the Lion mound and Hougomont, the walled farm which was at the heart of the battlefield.

The site of Wellington's victory at Waterloo compares poorly with other historic battlefields in Europe
